On this quiet Caribbean isle, chic resorts with stark white exteriors seem to merge into the surrounding sand. Super-luxe hideaways like Cap Juluca (pictured) and CuisinArt Resort & Spa specialize in privacy, which is why celebrities flock here to canoodle in the crystal waters paparazzi-free. The beaches — claimed by locals to have sand so powder-fine it won't stick to your feet — are the most coveted spots for intimate ceremonies. Parties can then go grand in an award-winning restaurant or low-key at sites like Scilly Cay — a private island just a two-minute boat ride from the mainland, where your clan can play in the surf before indulging in just-grilled crayfish and jugs of potent rum punch.

Nothing says sexy like Tahiti's overwater bungalows, built on stilts over neon-blue waters and featuring glass-paneled walls and floors for drinking in the views.

Nothing says sexy like Tahiti's overwater bungalows, built on stilts over neon-blue waters and featuring glass-paneled walls and floors — all the better for drinking in the views from all sides. A-list pairs including Nicole Kidman and Keith Urban and Carrie Underwood and Mike Fisher have crossed the Pacific to honeymoon here. Thanks to recently relaxed legal requirements, visiting couples can now make it official right on the sand or in one of these sumptuous digs. Or head to Le Meridien Bora Bora, where you can say I do in an overwater chapel in front of an altar made of shells.
